A Note on this Draft

This draft is the second edition of the vocal score first published in 2008. It is the companion to the new full score and orchestra parts of The Grand Duke, which are available for download (also as drafts) from imslp.org. The parts have been used in three full productions, from which I received and incorporated many helpful suggestions.

The preface, which begins overleaf, refers to appendices that are not included in this draft. Originally, I was going to wait until the full score, parts, and revised vocal score could be issued together with the appendices complete. But, given that I have already provided the full score and parts to several groups that asked for them, Daniel B. Miller of imslp.org persuaded me that it would be best to make these sources available for download now. At any given time, someone is producing this opera somewhere, and could benefit from the edition as it stands today.

The second edition is mostly compatible with the first. But in researching the full score, I discovered performance alternatives that would have been in the first edition of the vocal score, had I known about them then. For example, originally the Act I duet for Ernest and Julia, “How would I play this part,” continued directly into the chorus, “My goodness me! what shall I do?” But early band parts show that this transition was altered to bring the duet to a full close, no doubt to allow a break for applause. The vocal score now provides both options. The preface describes other changes and the reasons for them.

This second edition will eventually supersede the first. The first edition is still offered for sale at lulu.com and will always be available for download at imslp.org.

By making a draft available now, along with the full score and parts, I hope I will receive additional feedback that will make the final product ultimately better. In the meantime, if the appendices never come (I intend that they will, but one never knows), I am confident that the work as it stands makes good on the promise that quality editions of all the Gilbert & Sullivan operas should eventually be available for free.

Preface

Librettist W. S. Gilbert (1836–1911) and composer Arthur Sullivan (1842–1900) wrote fourteen comic operas together. The Grand Duke (1896) was the last and least successful of these.¹

The Grand Duke's early publication history followed the same pattern as most of the Savoy Operas. A vocal score was prepared quickly and rushed into print, to capitalize on the expected popularity that never came. Like the other early scores, that of The Grand Duke was riddled with errors, and it did not fully reflect all the changes the creators had made in the last days before after opening night and then after it. Indeed, for a variety of reasons, the score of The Grand Duke was considerably worse than usual. It was also not a shining example of the music typesetter's art.

Most of the other G&S vocal scores eventually benefited from a revised edition in modern notation, reflecting the settled text of each work as performed by the flame-bearers of the “tradition,” the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company. But as the D'Oyly Carte never revived The Grand Duke on stage,² the first edition was also the final one.

When this score was initially published in 2008, it was the first edition since 1896. I had several goals in mind. First, I wanted to produce a score that was significantly clearer, more readable, and more faithful to Gilbert and Sullivan's intentions than the 1896 edition, which before then was the only one in existence.

Second, I wanted to produce a score meeting, if not exceeding, the quality of Gilbert & Sullivan editions generally available from commercial publishers. This score is decidedly not a commercial venture. You can purchase a professionally printed copy for a relatively modest cost; or, you can download it for free. But I did not want it merely to be “good, considering that it is free.”

Third, I wanted the edition to be recognized as a work of serious scholarship. I've included an introduction describing the history of the opera, and an appendix describing the relationships of the sources and the editorial procedure. There is an extensive critical apparatus describing variants, performance options, and emendations to principal sources. Directors and students of the Gilbert & Sullivan canon are likely to have many questions about variants and performance alternatives that are answered in the introduction and appendix. The edition should satisfy those with scholarly interests, as well as those who simply need a clear, responsibly sourced text that is easy to use.

² The Company's only performance of the opera after the original London production and early tours was a single concert reading in the 1975 centenary year, followed by a commercial recording.

Like most of the Savoy Operas, The Grand Duke passed through several revisions before reaching its final form. Because the original production failed badly, modern directors have always taken liberties with the text—adding back music that the creators had deleted, and deleting some that they had kept. There is no standard version of The Grand Duke. Each new production makes its own decisions about how much of the surviving material to incorporate.

In most editions, the editor establishes a single text that represents the final form of the work. Alternative versions are banished to appendices. I have long been unhappy with this approach, as it forces performers who disagree with the editor to flip repeatedly between the front and back of the book. Such an edition is especially unsuitable for The Grand Duke, given that practically nobody performs the piece with all of Gilbert & Sullivan's final cuts. If I reduced the opera to just one text, performers would be stuck with my decisions, some of which are sure to be proven wrong or just inconvenient for the requirements of a given production.

In 2008, I was already aware of many performance options, ranging from entire songs to little snippets a few bars in length. My research since then has uncovered more of these. I have tried to present all the significant, reasonably performable alternatives, in situ. The director or performer chooses which options to use and crosses out the others. This, I believe, is easier than flipping to the back of the book or having to write in extra measures in a cramped space. However, it does mean that a director or conductor must make decisions and communicate them to a cast and orchestra before a first reading.

Of course, the appendices still have a role to play. If the primary text presented too many options, it could become cluttered and unreadable. There are hundreds of little discrepancies in individual notes and syllables. For most of these small variants, I present just one option in the main text and describe the competing readings in the critical apparatus. I have tried to respect Gilbert & Sullivan's intentions—which are not always clear. Some of the alternatives could be what Gilbert and Sullivan preferred. We don't always know for sure. (A new appendix in this revised edition itemizes all the textual decisions that a production must make.)

Broude Brothers had hoped to produce critical editions of the entire Gilbert & Sullivan canon. A few years ago, Ronald Broude came to the regretful conclusion that the project would end with most of the operas not finished—and indeed, with most not started. He knew of my interest in The Grand Duke. Given that his firm would not be publishing it, he gave me the materials he had, which included a photocopy of Sullivan's autograph score and a set of band parts appearing to date from either the original production at the Savoy or one of the early 1896 provincial tours. (I later obtained a better copy of the autograph from the British Library.) The companion full score to this edition is derived from these sources. I have also been able to make further improvements to the vocal score, which are reflected in this revised edition.

In 2008, I still believed that a Broude Brothers edition was coming eventually. I considered my vocal score a “down payment” on that project. Now that I know there will never be a Broude Grand Duke, I wondered if I ought to take on that burden. Early drafts of several numbers in the full score featured Broude’s system of multiple bracket styles and dotted lines, showing the different layers of editorial intervention. After wrestling with that, I gained a new appreciation for why every Broude volume took so many years to complete.

The Gilbert & Sullivan community should be grateful for the operas that Broude published; I am honoured to have contributed (in a minor way) to a couple of them. And yet, several operas that Broude might have published lie incomplete today, benefiting no one. I cannot help but wonder if the contribution to scholarship might, overall, have been greater if Broude had elected to publish more operas with a less elaborate, but still scholarly, critical apparatus. Because this is not the only project I hope to publish in my lifetime, I decided not to replicate the Broude approach.

I decided instead to print the score entirely without editorial markings such as brackets and dashed slurs. The appendix states the editorial policy but does not purport to state the rationale of every fortissimo. The critical apparatus covers passages where an editorial choice was not routine, but many more cases that I consider obvious are handled silently. Given unlimited time, I might have documented everything exactly as Broude did, an approach that I still consider the gold standard. But as no other publisher of Sullivan editions has done so to that extent, I believe my decision places me in good company.

The Broude editions cover libretto variants extensively, including drafts and pre-production versions. I intend to cover that material in my long-delayed Variorum Gilbert & Sullivan with the late Michael Walters, of which one volume has been published to date. The Grand Duke will be part of Volume V. The reader would not be mistaken to suggest that I had better get going—yet another reason not to make this edition more elaborate than it must be.

Therefore, with only a few exceptions, I have presented just one version of the dialogue: the settled state that Gilbert approved for publication after the post-première changes had been completed. I have, however, presented the alternative versions of the dialogue that are needed to introduce optional songs. A handful of other dialogue variants are mentioned in footnotes.

I am mindful of my own tendency to allow these types of projects to remain in gestation for many years. Indeed, almost four years elapsed between a widely circulated draft and the 2008 first edition, and now sixteen years to the second. Readers who know me are no doubt aware of several other such projects that I have promised, but not yet delivered. In releasing this new edition of The Grand Duke now, I hope that I am fulfilling a genuine need, in a manner that will stand the test of time.

Changes Since the First Edition

I was gratified by the response to the 2008 edition. As of late 2021, lulu.com had sold over 600 copies of the printed version and provided even more of the free download.¹ It won't make the best-seller list, but it's a significant number for an opera that is not often performed.

Most of the editorial decisions that I made in 2008 are still sound. With that said, all scores have errors, and mine was no exception. This revised edition fixes many mistakes and incorporates the new research that went into the full score. However, the vocal parts are not much changed. Those who want to keep working with earlier printings of the vocal score should find that it happily co-exists with this one. I was, alas, unable to preserve the pagination of the first edition. However, measure numbers remain the same, and so do most of the rehearsal letters, aside from a few that I later realized were misplaced. A new appendix itemizes the significant differences between the first and second editions. A more detailed errata list will eventually be made available for download.

In most critical editions, the bulk of the commentary appears in the full score. The vocal score has either no critical apparatus or much less of it. This approach may have economic and practical benefits, given that full scores are more expensive. But it presumes that orchestral conductors are the primary consumers of the extra material—to the disadvantage of singers, stage directors, accompanists, conductors of shows that only use a piano, or anyone else who might be interested in the research but has no use for an orchestral score.

Given that I already included a general introduction and detailed critical apparatus in the first edition of the vocal score, it seems misguided to remove them now. And yet, it would be wasteful and error-prone to print the same material twice. In my experience, most conductors acquire the vocal score too, as it is more practical to use in singing and blocking rehearsals; but not all vocal score users acquire a full score. I have therefore taken a bifurcated approach. Appendix material relating to the orchestration appears in the full score. The general introduction and all other appendix material is in the vocal score, so that they are accessible to the widest possible audience. It is impossible to entirely avoid duplication—for instance, an optional cut must be explained in both scores—but this approach seems more practical than any other.

In the first edition, I printed two numbers in their entirety, twice: the duet for Rudolph and the Baroness (No. 10), and the Act I finale (No. 12). I still believe that this is still the best approach for the duet. The alternative of printing it once and marking the cut would leave many of the orchestra parts with awkward page turns. But I now feel it is more useful to print the Act I finale just once, with the optional cuts marked. There are five separate cuts, several of them quite small, that distinguish the original finale and the abridged version. A separate printing of latter is ideal for those who want to take all five cuts, but not for those who might want to consider them individually. The finale occupies seventy-six pages in the vocal score—far more in the full score—so a second copy of it, even with cuts, adds to the length of the volume considerably.

In the first edition, I used dotted lines and square brackets to denote editorially supplied slurs and dynamics. As noted above, when I began work on the full score, I quickly concluded that the best approach was to eliminate the brackets and dotted lines entirely, for several reasons. These signals of the editor’s intervention can be distracting and are themselves a potential source of error. Having worked with my own score as a performer, I concluded that the bracketed dynamics and dotted slurs were almost all uncontroversial and even pedantic at times. I never received a question or comment about any of them.

Besides that, what counts as an “editorially supplied” dynamic? The answer was straightforward in the first edition of this vocal score, for which the only authoritative source was the 1896 Chappell vocal score. It is far more complicated now. Sullivan’s autograph, the band parts, and the original vocal score may all disagree. Sometimes, Sullivan’s autograph is inconsistent—for instance, the original statement of a theme might have dynamics, but not the repeat. Or Sullivan might supply dynamics in some instruments but not in others. A bracket signals that the editor has done something, but otherwise it is not especially informative. Given that I elected not to use brackets and dotted lines in the full score, I decided the vocal score should no longer have them either.

The first edition provided separate appendices itemizing the editorially supplied staccato dots and cautionary accidentals. I suspect this information was important to virtually no one, and it won’t be included in any future editions I may do. But as I already went to the trouble of creating the tables, I see no reason to remove them, although I have not added to them either, and I have not provided similar appendices in the full score.

Acknowledgments

Many people reviewed drafts of the first edition of the vocal score, supplied source materials, or answered my many questions. The participants at QWERTY/Conn III gave the score a concert reading in May 2005. Florrie Marks, musical director of The Gilbert & Sullivan Society of Chester County, PA, used the score for their production in November 2005 and provided many practical suggestions based on that experience. The 2005 draft was used in at least three other productions that I know of, and in each case one or more participants provided comments afterwards.

The late Andrea Stryker-Rodda organized a “proofing team” consisting of Paul Howarth, Steven Lichtenstein, Philip Sternenber, and Clive Woods. Their comments went far beyond mere proofreading, extending to hundreds of improvements, great and small. Lichtenstein gave up several weekends to work in the Seattle Gilbert & Sullivan Society’s archives, where he resolved dozens of thorny questions by checking the vocal score against the orchestration (as I did not have a copy of Sullivan’s autograph or the 1896 band parts at the time).

Many others provided helpful suggestions and comments on the first edition, including Lisa Berglund, Jennifer Cole, Stan DeOrsey, Paul Ensell, Deborah Jacobson, Daniel Kravetz, Laurie

Marks, Mitchell Orman, Leonard Pinsker, William Revels, Laura Schatz, Samuel Silvers, Douglas Whaley, and Peter Zavan.

Steven Lichtenstein posted a detailed Grand Duke errata list to the Gilbert and Sullivan Archive on the Internet, from which I benefited enormously. Mike Storie was kind enough to send me a gratis copy of the amended vocal score that the Seattle Gilbert & Sullivan Society prepared for their 1999 production.

Members of the Internet discussion group SavoyNet provided much enthusiasm, scholarship, and encouragement over a period of many years. Earlier versions of this score were used to prepare the SavoyNet Performing Group's 2009 and 2022 productions at the International Gilbert & Sullivan Festival. I received many helpful suggestions from the group, particularly its Musical Directors, Ori Siegel (2009) and Marisa Green (2022).

In about 2011 or 2012, John Wolfson graciously allowed me to spend the better part of a full day in his apartment studying Sullivan's autograph manuscript, which he still owned at the time. (He later sold it to the British Library.) From that one day of study, I was able to note many corrections to the vocal score. Still, I had no plans then to produce a full score: I lacked the sources (and, I felt, the skills) to do so.

I began to reconsider after I received a set of 1896 band parts and a photocopy of Sullivan's autograph from Ronald Broude. Still, the full score existed only in my head, as one of many "someday" projects. Enter my new friend, Nate Ridgeway of the Homeschool Gilbert & Sullivan Players of Southeast Chattanooga, Tennessee. The Players had already decided to use my vocal score. Nate asked if I'd prepare the full score and parts for their April 2022 production. That wasn't a small ask, but he gave me almost a year's notice. If I were going to do it eventually, it was better to have a deadline, so I accepted. It is thanks to him, not only that the full score and parts now exist, but that I have been able to make so many improvements in this revised edition of the vocal score.

My apologies to anyone whom I've forgotten to thank. It goes without saying that the text and any remaining errors are my responsibility alone.

A Note Concerning the Performer's Edition

After the 2009 production by the SavoyNet Performing Group, I had several requests to create an edition without the Introduction and Appendices. I recognize that many purchasers of the score will not be concerned with this extra material, which adds both bulk and cost. As a practical matter, the score without these items is much easier to carry around in rehearsal. I recommend the full edition to conductors, directors, scholars, and anyone else interested in the history of the opera.

Musical score for measures 43-46. The key signature is one sharp (F#). The score is written for piano (p) and includes a section labeled 'B' in a box above measure 44. The notation features a mix of eighth and sixteenth notes, rests, and chords. The piano part includes a large brace under the first two measures, indicating a continuous line.

A musical score for the song 'The Rose Tree'. The score is written for a piano and voice. The piano part is in the left hand, and the voice part is in the right hand. The key signature is one sharp (F#), and the time signature is 4/4. The score consists of four measures. The first two measures show the piano accompaniment and the vocal melody. The last two measures show the piano accompaniment and the vocal melody, with a trill (tr) indicated above the notes.

47

A musical score for the song 'The Rose Tree'. The score is written for a piano and voice. The piano part is in the left hand, and the voice part is in the right hand. The key signature is one sharp (F#), and the time signature is 4/4. The score consists of two systems. The first system has two measures, and the second system has three measures. The piano part features a melody with a trill in the first measure of the first system, and a series of chords and single notes in the second system. The voice part features a melody with a trill in the first measure of the first system, and a series of notes and rests in the second system. The lyrics 'The Rose Tree' are written below the voice part.

51

A musical score for the song "The Rose Tree". The score is written for voice and piano. The key signature is one sharp (F#), and the time signature is 4/4. The music is in common time. The vocal line is written in a soprano clef, and the piano accompaniment is written in a grand staff (treble and bass clefs). The piano part features a prominent bass line with a walking bass pattern. The melody is simple and catchy, with a clear chorus and verse structure. The score includes a key signature change to one flat (Bb) at the end of the piece.

Musical score for the Cello part. The score is written on a grand staff (treble and bass clefs) with a key signature of one sharp (F#). The melody is primarily in the treble clef, featuring a series of eighth and sixteenth notes, often beamed together. The bass clef provides harmonic support with chords and single notes. The score includes a fermata over a measure in the treble clef and a trill ornament in the bass clef. The piece concludes with a final chord in the bass clef.

61

A musical score for the song "The Rose Tree". The score is written for a piano, with a treble and bass staff. The key signature is one sharp (F#), and the time signature is 4/4. The melody is in the treble staff, and the accompaniment is in the bass staff. The melody starts with a quarter note G4, followed by a quarter note A4, a quarter note B4, and a quarter note C5. The accompaniment starts with a quarter note G2, followed by a quarter note A2, a quarter note B2, and a quarter note C3. The melody continues with a quarter note D5, a quarter note E5, a quarter note F#5, and a quarter note G5. The accompaniment continues with a quarter note D3, a quarter note E3, a quarter note F#3, and a quarter note G3. The melody ends with a quarter note G4, and the accompaniment ends with a quarter note G2. The score is written in a simple, clear style, with a focus on the melody and the basic accompaniment.

G

This system contains measures 129 through 133. The right hand continues its melodic pattern, and the left hand's accompaniment becomes more complex with some chords. The dynamic marking ff (fortissimo) is introduced. A box containing the letter G is placed above the right hand staff at the start of measure 133.

134

This system contains measures 134 through 138. The right hand plays a series of chords and single notes, while the left hand continues with a rhythmic accompaniment. The key signature and time signature remain consistent.

139

This system contains measures 139 through 143. The right hand features a melodic line with some rests, and the left hand provides a harmonic support with chords and moving lines.

144

p

This system contains measures 144 through 147. The right hand has a melodic line with a long slur over measures 145 and 146. The left hand has a bass line with a long slur. The dynamic marking p (piano) is in the left hand, and dolce (dolce) is written above the right hand staff.

148

This system contains measures 148 through 152. The right hand continues with a melodic line, and the left hand provides a harmonic accompaniment with chords and moving lines. The key signature and time signature remain consistent.

168

Measures 174-179. The key signature is three sharps (F#, C#, G#). The music is in 4/4 time. Measure 174 starts with a piano (p) dynamic. The right hand features a melodic line with eighth and quarter notes, while the left hand provides a harmonic accompaniment with sustained chords and moving lines.

174

Measures 180-184. The key signature changes to two sharps (F#, C#). The music continues with a melodic line in the right hand and a more active bass line in the left hand. A crescendo (cresc.) marking is present in measure 182, indicating a gradual increase in volume.

180

Measures 185-189. The key signature remains two sharps. The right hand continues with a melodic line, and the left hand features a prominent, sustained chord in the first measure, marked with a forte (f) dynamic.

185

Measures 191-195. The key signature changes to one sharp (F#). The music features a melodic line in the right hand and a bass line in the left hand. A forte (f) dynamic is marked in measure 193. A box containing the letter 'K' is placed above the right hand in measure 193.

191

196

Measures 201-205. The key signature changes to natural (C major). The music features a melodic line in the right hand and a bass line in the left hand. A piano (p) dynamic is marked in measure 201. The right hand features a series of chords and moving lines.

Enter NOTARY TANNHÄUSER.

NOTARY. Hallo! Surely I'm not late?

(All chatter unintelligibly in reply.)

NOTARY. But, dear me, you're all at breakfast! Has the wedding taken place?

(All chatter unintelligibly in reply.)

NOTARY. My good girls, one at a time, I beg. Let me understand the situation. As solicitor to the conspiracy to dethrone the Grand Duke—a conspiracy in which the members of this company are deeply involved—I am invited to the marriage of two of its members. I present myself in due course, and I find, not only that the ceremony has taken place—which is not of the least consequence—but the wedding breakfast is half eaten—which is a consideration of the most serious importance.

(LUDWIG and LISA come down.)

LUDWIG. But the ceremony has not taken place. We can't get a parson.

NOTARY. Can't get a parson! Why, how's that? They're three a penny!

LUDWIG. Oh, it's the old story—the Grand Duke!

ALL. Ugh!

LUDWIG. It seems that the little imp has selected this, our wedding day, for a convocation of all the clergy in the town to settle the details of his approaching marriage with the enormously wealthy Baroness von Krakenfeldt, and there won't be a parson to be had for love or money until six o'clock this evening!

LISA. And as we produce our magnificent classical revival of Troilus and Cressida to-night at seven, we have no alternative but to eat our wedding-breakfast before we've earned it. So sit down, and make the best of it.

GRETCHEN. Oh, I should like to pull his Grand Ducal ears for him, that I should. He's the meanest, the cruellest, the most spiteful little ape in Christendom!

OLGA. Well, we shall soon be freed from his tyranny. To-morrow the Despot is to be dethroned.

LUDWIG. Hush, rash girl! ~~You have not what you say.~~

~~Gretchen. Don't be absurd! We're all in it—we're all ciled, here!~~

LUDWIG. ~~That has nothing to do with it.~~ Know ye not that in alluding to our conspiracy without having first given and received the secret sign, you are violating a fundamental principle of our Association?

Dialogue if No. 2a is omitted

LUDWIG (struggling with his feelings). If you'll be so obliging as to wait until I've got rid of this feeling of warm oil at the bottom of my throat, I'll tell you all about it. (LISA gives him some brandy.) Thank you, my love; it's gone. Well, the piece will be produced upon a scale of unexampled magnificence. It is confidently predicted that my appearance as King Agamemnon, in a Louis Quatorze wig, will mark an epoch in the theatrical annals of Pfennig Halbpfennig. I endeavoured to persuade Ernest Dummkopf, our manager, to lend us the classical dresses for our marriage. ~~Think of the effect of a splendid wedding procession winding through the streets of Springfield! Thousands of eyes will be turned to the wedding cavalcade, and the young couple will be the centre of admiration for miles around. The High Street, singing "Eloia! Eloia! Spoponax, Eloia!" It would have been tremendous!~~

NOTARY. And he declined?

LUDWIG. He did, on the prosaic ground that it might rain, and the ancient Greeks didn't carry umbrellas! If, as is confidently expected, Ernest Dummkopf is elected to succeed the de-throned one, mark my words, he will make a mess of it.

[Exit LUDWIG with LISA.]

OLGA. He's sure to be elected. His entire company has promised to plump for him on the understanding that all the places about the Court are filled by members of his troupe, according to professional precedence.

ERNEST enters in great excitement.

BERTHA (looking off). Here comes Ernest Dummkopf. Now we shall know all about it!

ALL. Well—what's the news? How is the election going?

ERNEST. Oh, it's a certainty—a practical certainty! Two of the candidates have been arrested for debt, and the third is a baby in arms—so, if you keep your promises, and vote solid, I'm cocksure of election!

OLGA. Trust to us. But you remember the conditions?

ERNEST. Yes—all of you shall be provided for, for life. Every man shall be ennobled—every lady shall have unlimited credit at the Court Milliner's, and all salaries shall be paid weekly in advance!

GRETCHEN. Oh, it's quite clear he knows how to rule a Grand Duchy!

ERNEST. Rule a Grand Duchy? Why, my good girl, for ten years past I've ruled a theatrical company! A man who can do that can rule anything!

ERNEST. Elected by my fellow-conspirators to be Grand Duke of Pfennig Halbpennig as soon as the contemptible little occupant of the historical throne is deposed—here is promotion indeed! Why,* instead of playing Troilus of Troy for a month, I shall play Grand Duke of Pfennig Halbpennig for a lifetime! Yet, am I happy? No—far from happy! The lovely English comédienne—the beautiful Julia, whose dramatic ability is so overwhelming that our audiences forgive even her strong English accent—that rare and radiant being treats my respectful advances with disdain unutterable! And yet, who knows? She is haughty and ambitious, and it may be that the splendid change in my fortunes may work a corresponding change in her feelings towards me!

Enter JULIA JELLICOE.

JULIA. Herr Dummkopf, a word with you, if you please.

ERNEST. Beautiful English maiden—

JULIA. No compliments, I beg. I desire to speak with you on a purely professional matter, so we will, if you please, dispense with allusions to my personal appearance, which can only tend to widen the breach which already exists between us.

ERNEST (aside). My only hope shattered! The haughty Londoner still despises me! (Aloud.) It shall be as you will.

JULIA. I understand that the conspiracy in which we are all concerned is to develop tomorrow, and that the company is likely to elect you to the throne on the understanding that the posts about the Court are to be filled by members of your theatrical troupe, according to their professional importance.

ERNEST. That is so.

JULIA. Then all I can say is that it places me in an extremely awkward position.

ERNEST (very depressed). I don't see how it concerns you.

JULIA. Why, bless my heart, don't you see that, as your leading lady, I am bound under a serious penalty to play the leading part in all your productions?

ERNEST. Well?

JULIA. Why, of course, the leading part in this production will be the Grand Duchess!

ERNEST. My wife?

JULIA. That is another way of expressing the same idea.

ERNEST (aside—delighted). I scarcely dared even to hope for this!

* The original libretto has “Why, that instead. . . .” The extra word appears to be an error, and has been suppressed.

JULIA. Of course, as your leading lady, you'll be mean enough to hold me to the terms of my agreement. Oh, that's so like a man! Well, I suppose there's no help for it—I shall have to do it.

ERNEST (aside). She's mine! (Aloud.) But—do you really think you would care to play that part? (Taking her hand.)

JULIA (withdrawing it). Care to play it? Certainly not—but what am I to do? Business is business, and I am bound by the terms of my agreement.

ERNEST. It's for a long run, mind—a run that may last many, many years—no understudy—and once embarked upon there's no throwing it up.

JULIA. Oh, we're used to these long runs in England: they are the curse of the stage—but, you see, I've no option.

ERNEST. You think the part of the Grand Duchess will be good enough for you?

JULIA. Oh, I think so. It's a very good part in Gerolstein, and oughtn't to be a bad one in Pfennig Halbpennig. Why, what did you suppose I was going to play?

ERNEST (keeping up a show of reluctance). But, considering your strong personal dislike to me and your persistent rejection of my repeated offers, won't you find it difficult to throw yourself into the part with all the impassioned enthusiasm that the character seems to demand? Remember, it's a strongly emotional part, involving long and repeated scenes of rapture, tenderness, adoration, devotion—all in luxuriant excess, and all of the most demonstrative description.

JULIA. My good sir, throughout my career I have made it a rule never to allow private feeling to interfere with my professional duties. You may be quite sure that (however distasteful the part may be) if I undertake it, I shall consider myself professionally bound to throw myself into it with all the ardour at my command.

ERNEST (aside—with effusion). I'm the happiest fellow alive! (Aloud.) Now—would you have any objection—to—to give me some idea—if it's only a mere sketch—as to how you would play it? It would be really interesting—to me—to know your conception of—of—the part of my wife.

JULIA. How would I play it? Now, let me see—let me see. (Considering.) Ah, I have it!

JULIA. Well, a nice mess you've got us into! There's an end of our precious plot! All up—pop—fizzle—bang—done for!

LUDWIG. Yes, but—ha! ha!—fancy my choosing the Grand Duke's private detective, of all men, to make a confidant of! When you come to think of it, it's really devilish funny!

ERNEST (angrily). When you come to think of it, it's extremely injudicious to admit into a conspiracy every pudding-headed baboon who presents himself!

~~LUDWIG. Yes. I should never do that. If I were a baboon, I should hesitate to trust any man who could be so easily deceived. I should have consulted my Zoolo-~~ ~~gical~~
dens.

LISA. Ludwig is far from being a baboon. Poor boy, he could not help giving us away—it's his trusting nature—he was deceived.

JULIA (furiously). His trusting nature! (To LUDWIG.) Oh, I should like to talk to you in my own language for five minutes—only five minutes! I know some good, strong, energetic English remarks that would shrivel your trusting nature into raisins—only you wouldn't understand them!

LUDWIG. Here we perceive one of the disadvantages of a neglected education!

ERNEST (to JULIA). And I suppose you'll never be my Grand Duchess, now!

JULIA. Grand Duchess? My good friend, if you don't produce the piece how can I play the part?

ERNEST. True. (To LUDWIG.) You see what you've done.

LUDWIG. But, my dear sir, you don't seem to understand that the man ate three sausage-rolls. Keep that fact steadily before you. Three large sausage-rolls.

JULIA. Bah!—Lots of people eat sausage-rolls who are not conspirators.

LUDWIG. Then they shouldn't. It's bad form. It's not the game. ~~When one of the Ham-~~
~~Family is present, it is his duty to say, "A sausage-roll?" And~~
~~if, on examination, he finds that he is not a conspirator, he is bound to eat~~
~~three sausage-rolls.~~

LISA. ~~Of course he is.~~ One should always play the game. (To NOTARY, who has been smiling placidly through this.) What are you grinning at, you greedy old man?

NOTARY. Nothing—don't mind me. It is always amusing to the legal mind to see ~~laymen~~ laymen bothering themselves about a matter which to a trained lawyer presents no difficulty whatever.

ALL. No difficulty!

NOTARY. None whatever! The way out of it is quite simple.

ALL. Simple?

NOTARY. Certainly! Now attend. In the first place, you two men fight a Statutory Duel.

ERNEST. A Statutory Duel?

~~Enter A Statutory Duel Hall, a room in which the Statutory Duel is held.~~

LUDWIG. Never heard of such a thing.

NOTARY. It is true that the practice has fallen into abeyance through disuse. But all the laws of Pfennig Halbpennig run for a hundred years, when they die a natural death, unless, in the meantime, they have been revived for another century. The Act that institutes the Statutory Duel was passed a hundred years ago, and as it has never been revived, it expires to-morrow. So you're just in time.

JULIA. But what is the use of talking to us about Statutory Duels when we none of us know what a Statutory Duel is?

NOTARY. Don't you? Then I'll explain.

LUDWIG. I see. The man who draws the lowest card—

NOTARY. Dies, ipso facto, a social death. He loses all his civil rights—his identity disappears—the Revising Barrister expunges his name from the list of voters, and the winner takes his place, whatever it may be, discharges all his functions and adopts all his responsibilities.

ERNEST. This is all very well, as far as it goes, but it only protects one of us. What's to become of the survivor?

LUDWIG. Yes, that's an interesting point, because I might be the survivor.

NOTARY. The survivor goes at once to the Grand Duke, and, in a burst of remorse, denounces the dead man as the moving spirit of the plot. He is accepted as King's evidence, and, as a matter of course, receives a free pardon. To-morrow, when the law expires, the dead man will, ipso facto, come to life again—the Revising Barrister will restore his name to the list of voters, and he will resume all his obligations as though nothing unusual had happened.

JULIA. When he will at once be arrested, tried, and executed on the evidence of the informer! Candidly, my friend, I don't think much of your plot.

NOTARY. Dear, dear, dear, the ignorance of the laity! My good young lady, it is a beautiful maxim of our glorious Constitution that a man can only die once. Death expunges crime, and when he comes to life again, it will be with a clean slate.

ERNEST. It's really very ingenious.

LUDWIG (to NOTARY). My dear sir, we owe you our lives!

LISA (aside to LUDWIG). May I kiss him?

LUDWIG. Certainly not: you're a big girl now. (To ERNEST.) Well, miscreant, are you prepared to meet me on the field of honour?

ERNEST. At once. By Jove, what a couple of fire-eaters we are!

LISA. Ludwig doesn't know what fear is.

LUDWIG. Oh, I don't mind this sort of duel!

~~ERNEST. It's not like a duel with swords. I hate a duel with swords. I don't mind—I mind—it's the blood!~~

~~LUDWIG. And I hate a duel with pistols. It's not the ball I mind—it's the bang.~~

NOTARY. Altogether it is a great improvement on the old method of giving satisfaction.

No. 7. QUINTET—JULIA, LISA, ERNEST, NOTARY, & LUDWIG

Allegro moderato

Musical score for the instrumental introduction of the quintet. The score is for five voices (Julia, Lisa, Ernest, Notary, Ludwig) and Piano. The key signature is one flat (B-flat), and the time signature is common time (C). The tempo is marked Allegro moderato. The piano part begins with a forte (f) dynamic, featuring a melodic line in the right hand and a supporting bass line in the left hand.

Vocal entries for the quintet. The lyrics are: "Strange the views some peo - ple hold! Two young fel - lows quar - rel—". The vocal parts are for Julia (JUL.), Lisa (LISA), Ernest (ERN.), Notary (NOT.), and Ludwig (LUD.). The piano part continues with a piano (p) dynamic, providing harmonic support for the vocal entries.

~~DUPONT. My Lord Chamberlain, may you and my marriage with the wealthy Baroness von Kackerfeldt will take place to-morrow, and you will be good enough to see that the rejoicings are on a scale of unusual liberality. Pass that on. (Chamberlain whispers to Vice Chamberlain, who whispers to the king and queen.) The sports will begin with a Wedding Breakfast Beer. The leading pastry-cooks of the town will be invited to compete, and the winner will not only enjoy the satisfaction of seeing his breakfast devoured by the Grand Ducal pair, but he will also be entitled to have the Arms of Pfennig Halbpennig tatted between his shoulder blades. The Vice Chamberlain will see to this. All the public fountains of Speisessal will run with Gingschinken and Carmentisschinken at the public expense. The Assistant Vice Chamberlain will see to this. At night, everybody will illuminate, and as I have no desire to tax the public funds unduly, this will be done at the inhabitants' private expense. The Deputy Assistant Vice Chamberlain will see to this. All my Grand Ducal subjects will wear new clothes, and the Sub Deputy Assistant Vice Chamberlain will collect the usual commission on all sales. Wedding presents (which, on this occasion, should be on a scale of extraordinary magnificence) will be received at the Palace at any hour of the twenty-four, and the Temporary Sub Deputy Assistant Vice Chamberlain will sit up all night for this purpose. The entire population will be commanded to enjoy themselves, and with this view the Acting Temporary Sub Deputy Assistant Vice Chamberlain will sing comic songs in the Market Place from seven to eight o'clock. Finally, we have composed a Wedding Anthem, with which the entire population was required to provide themselves. It can be obtained from our Grand Ducal publishers at the usual discount price, and the Chamberlains will be expected to pay the bill. (Chamberlains bow and exeunt.)~~

RUDOLPH. I don't feel at all comfortable. I hope I'm not doing a foolish thing in getting married. After all, it's a poor heart that never rejoices, and this wedding of mine is the first little treat I've allowed myself since my christening. Besides, Caroline's income is very considerable, and as her ideas of economy are quite on a par with mine, it ought to turn out well. Bless her tough old heart, she's a mean little darling! Oh, here she is, punctual to her appointment!

Enter BARONESS VON KRAKENFELDT.

BARONESS. Rudolph! Why, what's the matter?

RUDOLPH. Why, I'm not quite myself, my pet. I'm a little worried and upset. I want a tonic. It's the low diet, I think. I am afraid, after all, I shall have to take the bull by the horns and have an egg with my breakfast.

BARONESS. I shouldn't do anything rash, dear. Begin with a jujube. (Gives him one.)

RUDOLPH (about to eat it, but changes his mind). I'll keep it for supper. (He sits by her and tries to put his arm round her waist.)

BARONESS. Rudolph, don't! What in the world are you thinking of?

RUDOLPH. I was thinking of embracing you, my sugarplum. Just as a little cheap treat.

BARONESS. What, here? In public? Really you appear to have no sense of delicacy.

RUDOLPH. No sense of delicacy, Bon-bon!

BARONESS. No. I can't make you out. ~~When you courted me, all your courting was done publicly in the Market Place. When you proposed to me, you proposed in the Market Place. And now that you are married, you are married in the Market Place. Surely you've a room in your Palace — with blinds — that would do.~~

RUDOLPH. But, my own, I can't help myself. I'm bound by my own decree.

BARONESS. Your own decree?

RUDOLPH. Yes. ~~Yes, all the houses that give on the Market Place belong to me, but the houses (which belong to the heirs of the Marquis) must attending to, and the houses wouldn't let me, so, with a view of increasing the value of the property, I decreed that all love-episodes between affectionate couples should take place, in public, on this spot, every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, when the band doesn't play.~~

~~BARONESS. Bless me, what a happy idea! So much so! And here you found it!~~

RUDOLPH. ~~Amuse? The sale of opera glasses fifty per cent, and the sale of opera glasses~~ (which is a Grand Ducal monopoly) has received an extraordinary stimulus! So, under the circumstances, would you allow me to put my arm round your waist? As a source of income! Just once!

BARONESS. But it's so very embarrassing. Think of the opera glasses!

RUDOLPH. My good girl, that's just what I am thinking of. Hang it all, we must give them something for their money! What's that?

BARONESS (unfolding paper, which contains a large letter, which she hands to him). It's a letter which your detective asked me to hand to you. I wrapped it up in yesterday's paper to keep it clean.

RUDOLPH. Oh, it's only his report! That'll keep. But, I say, you've never been and bought a newspaper?

BARONESS. My dear Rudolph, do you think I'm mad? It came wrapped round my breakfast.

RUDOLPH (relieved). I thought you were not the sort of girl to go and buy a newspaper! Well, as we've got it, we may as well read it. What does it say?

BARONESS. Why—dear me—here's your biography! "Our Detested Despot!"

RUDOLPH. Yes—I fancy that refers to me.

BARONESS. And it says—Oh, it can't be!

RUDOLPH. What can't be?

BARONESS. Why, it says that although you're going to marry me to-morrow, you were betrothed in infancy to the Princess of Monte Carlo!

RUDOLPH. Oh yes—that's quite right. Didn't I mention it?

BARONESS. Mention it! You never said a word about it!

RUDOLPH. Well, it doesn't matter, because, you see, it's practically off.

BARONESS. Practically off?

RUDOLPH. Yes. By the terms of the contract the betrothal is void unless the Princess marries before she is of age. Now, her father, the Prince, is stony-broke, and hasn't left his house for years for fear of arrest. Over and over again he has implored me to come to him to be married—but in vain. Over and over again he has implored me to advance him the money to enable the Princess to come to me—but in vain. I am very young, but not as young as that; and as the Princess comes of age at two to-morrow, why at two to-morrow I'm a free man, so I appointed that hour for our wedding, as I shall like to have as much marriage as I can get for my money.

BARONESS. I see. Of course, if the married state is a happy state, it's a pity to waste any of it.

RUDOLPH. Why, every hour we delayed I should lose a lot of you and you'd lose a lot of me!

BARONESS. My thoughtful darling! Oh, Rudolph, we ought to be very happy!

~~RUDOLPH. If I marry, I'll be my father-in-law's son-in-law. Still, I am a young man, and I shall be a young man in my marriage.~~

BARONESS. I often picture us in the long, cold, dark December evenings, sitting close to each other and singing impassioned duets to keep us warm, and thinking of all the lovely things we could afford to buy if we chose, and, at the same time, planning out our lives in a spirit of the most rigid and exacting economy!

RUDOLPH. It's a most beautiful and touching picture of connubial bliss in its highest and most rarefied development!

~~But I am a young man, and I shall be a young man in my marriage.~~

RUDOLPH. Oh, now for my detective's report. (Opens letter.) What's this! Another conspiracy! A conspiracy to depose me! Enter LUDWIG.

LUDWIG. Now for my confession and full pardon. They told me the Grand Duke was dancing duets in the Market Place, but I don't see him. (Sees RUDOLPH.) Hallo! Who's this? (Aside.) Why, it is the Grand Duke!

RUDOLPH (sobbing). Who are you, sir, who presume to address me in person? If you've anything to communicate, you must fling yourself at the feet of my Acting Temporary Sub-Deputy Assistant Vice-Chamberlain, ~~who will fling himself at the feet of his immediate superior, and so on, with successive feet flinging through the various grades~~—your communication will, in course of time, come to my august knowledge.

LUDWIG. But when I inform your Highness that in me you see the most unhappy, the most unfortunate, the most completely miserable man in your whole dominion—

RUDOLPH (still sobbing). You the most miserable man in my whole dominion? How can you have the face to stand there and say such a thing? Why, look at me! Look at me! (Bursts into tears.)

LUDWIG. Well, I wouldn't be a cry-baby.

RUDOLPH. A cry-baby? If you had just been told that you were going to be deposed to-morrow, and perhaps blown up with dynamite for all I know, wouldn't you be a cry-baby? ~~I do~~ ~~decide~~ if I could only hit upon some cheap and painless method of putting an end to an existence which has become insupportable, I would unhesitatingly adopt it!

LUDWIG. You would? (Aside.) I see a magnificent way out of this! By Jupiter, I'll try it! (Aloud.) Are you, by any chance, in earnest?

RUDOLPH. In earnest? Why, look at me!

LUDWIG. If you are really in earnest—if you really desire to escape scot free from this impending—this unspeakably horrible catastrophe—without trouble, danger, pain, or expense—why not resort to a Statutory Duel?

RUDOLPH. A Statutory Duel?

LUDWIG. Yes. The Act is still in force, but it will expire to-morrow afternoon. You fight—you lose—you are dead for a day. To-morrow, when the Act expires, you will come to life again and resume your Grand Duchy as though nothing had happened. In the meantime, the explosion will have taken place and the survivor will have had to bear the brunt of it.

RUDOLPH. Yes, that's all very well, but who'll be fool enough to be the survivor?

LUDWIG (kneeling). Actuated by an overwhelming sense of attachment to your Grand Ducal person, I unhesitatingly offer myself as the victim of your subjects' fury.

RUDOLPH. You do? Well, really that's very handsome. I daresay being blown up is not nearly as unpleasant as one would think.

LUDWIG. Oh, yes it is. It mixes one up, awfully!

RUDOLPH. But suppose I were to lose?*

LUDWIG. Oh, that's easily arranged. (Producing cards.) I'll put an Ace up my sleeve—you'll put a King up yours. When the drawing takes place, I shall seem to draw the higher card and you the lower. And there you are!

RUDOLPH. Oh, but that's cheating.

LUDWIG. So it is. I never thought of that. (Going.)

RUDOLPH (hastily). Not that I mind. But I say—you won't take an unfair advantage of your day of office? You won't go tipping people, or squandering my little savings in fireworks, or any nonsense of that sort?

LUDWIG. I am hurt—really hurt—by the suggestion.

RUDOLPH. You—you wouldn't like to put down a deposit, perhaps?

LUDWIG. No. I don't think I should like to put down a deposit.

RUDOLPH. Or give a guarantee?

LUDWIG. A guarantee would be equally open to objection.

RUDOLPH. It would be more regular. Very well, I suppose you must have your own way.

LUDWIG. Good. I say—we must have a devil of a quarrel!

RUDOLPH. Oh, a devil of a quarrel!

LUDWIG. Just to give colour to the thing. Shall I give you a sound thrashing before all the people? Say the word—it's no trouble.

RUDOLPH. No, I think not, though it would be very convincing and it's extremely good and thoughtful of you to suggest it. Still, a devil of a quarrel!

LUDWIG. Oh, a devil of a quarrel!

RUDOLPH. No half measures. Big words—strong language—rude remarks. Oh, a devil of a quarrel!

LUDWIG. Now, the question is, how shall we summon the people?

RUDOLPH. Oh, there's no difficulty about that. Bless your heart, they've been staring at us through those windows for the last half hour!

* Gilbert seems to have slipped here. Rudolph wants to lose. The line should either be “But suppose you were to lose?” or “But suppose I were to win?”

The piano accompaniment is written for the right and left hands. The right hand features a melody with eighth and sixteenth notes, often beamed together, and includes a long, sweeping slur across the final measures. The left hand provides harmonic support with chords and single notes, including a prominent bass line with eighth notes in the final section. The key signature has one sharp (F#), and the time signature is 4/4.

No. 13.

INTRODUCTION & CHORUS

(THE NEXT MORNING.)

SCENE. Entrance Hall of the Grand Ducal Palace.

Enter a procession of the members of the theatrical company (now dressed in the costumes of Troilus and Cressida), carrying garlands, playing on pipes, citharæ, and cymbals, and heralding the return of LUDWIG and JULIA from the marriage ceremony, which has just taken place.

JULIA. And now that everybody has gone, and we're happily and comfortably married, I want to have a few words with my new-born husband.

LUDWIG (aside). Yes, I expect you'll often have a few words with your new-born husband! (Aloud.) Well, what is it?

JULIA. Why, I've been thinking that as you and I have to play our parts for life, ~~it is most essential that~~ we should come to a definite understanding ~~as to how they shall be played.~~ Now, I've been considering how I can make the most of the Grand Duchess.

LUDWIG. Have you? Well, if you'll take my advice, you'll make a very fine part of it.

JULIA. Why, that's quite my idea.

LUDWIG. I shouldn't make it one of your hoity-toity vixenish viragoes.

JULIA. You think not?

LUDWIG. Oh, I'm quite clear about that. I should make her a tender, gentle, submissive, affectionate (but not too affectionate) child-wife—~~timidly anxious to will herself into her husband's heart, but kept in check by~~ awestruck ~~by~~ ^{by} for his exalted intellectual qualities and his majestic personal appearance.

JULIA. Oh, that is your idea of a good part?

LUDWIG. Yes—a wife who regards her husband's slightest wish as an inflexible law, ~~and~~ ~~should summon her to appear before him.~~ A crushed, despairing violet, whose blighted existence would culminate (all too soon) in a lonely and pathetic death-scene! A fine part, my dear.

JULIA. Yes. There's a good deal to be said for your view of it. Now there are some actresses whom it would fit like a glove.

LUDWIG (aside). I wish I'd married one of 'em!

JULIA. But, you see, I must consider my temperament. For instance, my temperament would demand some strong scenes of justifiable jealousy.

LUDWIG. Oh, there's no difficulty about that. You shall have them.

JULIA. With a lovely but detested rival—

LUDWIG. Oh, I'll provide the rival.

JULIA. Whom I should stab—stab—stab!

LUDWIG. Oh, I wouldn't stab her. It's been done to death. I should treat her with a silent and contemptuous disdain, ~~and delicately withdraw from her position which, to one of your position, would be utterly fatal.~~ ^{by} I can see you delicately withdrawing, up centre and off!

JULIA. Can you?

LUDWIG. Yes. It's a fine situation—and in your hands, full of quiet pathos!

BARONESS. Is this Court Mourning or a Fancy Ball?

LUDWIG. Well, it's a delicate combination of both effects. It is intended to express inconsolable grief for the decease of the late Duke and ebullient joy at the accession of his successor. I am his successor. Permit me to present to you my Grand Duchess. (Indicating JULIA.)

BARONESS. Your Grand Duchess? Oh, your Highness! (Curtseying profoundly.)

JULIA (sneering at her). Old frump!

BARONESS. Humph! A recent creation, probably?

LUDWIG. We were married only half-an-hour ago.

BARONESS. Exactly. I thought she seemed new to the position.

JULIA. Ma'am, I don't know who you are, but I flatter myself I can do justice to any part on the very shortest notice.

BARONESS. My dear, under the circumstances you are doing admirably—and you'll improve with practice. It's so difficult to be a lady when one isn't born to it.

JULIA (in a rage, to LUDWIG). Am I to stand this? Am I not to be allowed to pull her to pieces?

LUDWIG (aside to JULIA). No, no—it isn't Greek. Be a violet, I beg.

BARONESS. And now tell me all about this distressing circumstance. How did the Grand Duke die?

LUDWIG. He perished nobly—in a Statutory Duel.

BARONESS. In a Statutory Duel? But that's only a civil death!—and the Act expires to-night, and then he will come to life again!

LUDWIG. Well, no. Anxious to inaugurate my reign by conferring some inestimable boon on my people, I signalized this occasion by reviving the law for another hundred years.

BARONESS. For another hundred years? Then set the merry joybells ringing! Let festive epithalamia resound through these ancient halls! Cut the satisfying sandwich—broach the exhilarating Marsala—and let us rejoice to-day, if we never rejoice again!

LUDWIG. But I don't think I quite understand. We have already rejoiced a good deal.

BARONESS. Happy man, you little reck of the extent of the good things you are in for. When you killed Rudolph you adopted all his overwhelming responsibilities. Know then that I, Caroline von Krakenfeldt, am the most overwhelming of them all!

LUDWIG. But stop, stop—I've just been married to somebody else!

JULIA. Yes, ma'am, to somebody else, ma'am! Do you understand, ma'am? To somebody else!

BARONESS. Do keep this young woman quiet; she fidgets me!

JULIA. Fidgets you!

LUDWIG (aside to JULIA). Be a violet—a crushed, despairing violet.

JULIA. Do you suppose I intend to give up a magnificent part without a struggle?

LUDWIG. My good girl, she has the law on her side. Let us both bear this calamity with resignation. If you must struggle, go away and struggle in the seclusion of your chamber.

The musical score is set in a key with four flats (B-flat, E-flat, A-flat, D-flat) and a common time signature. The vocal line (treble clef) begins with a whole rest, followed by a half rest, then a quarter note G4, a half note A4, and a quarter note B4. A slur covers the next two measures: the first contains a quarter note A4, an eighth note G4, and an eighth rest; the second contains a quarter note F#4, an eighth note E4, and an eighth rest. The piano accompaniment (grand staff) features a rhythmic pattern of eighth notes in the right hand and chords in the left hand. The first two measures of the piano part are filled with this pattern. The third measure has a quarter rest in the right hand and a quarter note G4 in the left hand. The final two measures of the piano part consist of whole rests in both hands.

The musical score is for a vocal solo and piano accompaniment. The vocal line is in G major (one sharp) and 4/4 time. It begins with a whole rest, followed by a series of eighth and quarter notes. The piano accompaniment consists of a right hand with chords and a left hand with a simple bass line. The score is marked with a forte 'f' dynamic and the tempo/style 'Gaily.'.

Enter ERNEST.

ERNEST. It's of no use—I can't wait any longer. At any risk I must gratify my urgent desire to know what is going on. (Looking off.) Why, what's that? Surely I see a wedding procession winding down the hill, dressed in my Troilus and Cressida costumes! That's Ludwig's doing! I see how it is—he found the time hang heavy on his hands, and is amusing himself by getting married to Lisa. No—it can't be to Lisa, for here she is!

Enter LISA.

LISA (not seeing him). I really cannot stand seeing my Ludwig married twice in one day to somebody else!

ERNEST. Lisa!

(LISA sees him, and stands as if transfixed with horror.)

ERNEST. Come here—don't be a little fool—I want you.

(LISA suddenly turns and bolts off.)

ERNEST. Why, what's the matter with the little donkey? One would think she saw a ghost! But if he's not marrying Lisa, whom is he marrying? (Suddenly.) Julia! (Much overcome.) I see it all! The scoundrel! He had to adopt all my responsibilities, and he's shabbily taken advantage of the situation to marry the girl I'm engaged to! But no, it can't be Julia, for here she is!

Enter JULIA.

JULIA (not seeing him). I've made up my mind. I won't stand it! I'll send in my notice at once!

ERNEST. Julia! Oh, what a relief!

(JULIA gazes at him as if transfixed.)

ERNEST. Then you've not married Ludwig? You are still true to me?

(JULIA turns and bolts in grotesque horror. ERNEST follows and stops her.)

ERNEST. Don't run away! Listen to me. Are you all crazy?

JULIA (in affected terror). What would you with me, spectre? Oh, ain't his eyes sepulchral! And ain't his voice hollow! What are you doing out of your tomb at this time of day—apparition?

ERNEST. I do wish I could make you girls understand that I'm only technically dead, and that physically I'm as much alive as ever I was in my life!

JULIA. Oh, but it's an awful thing to be haunted by a technical bogey!

ERNEST. You won't be haunted much longer. The law must be on its last legs, and in a few hours I shall come to life again—resume all my social and civil functions, and claim my darling as my blushing bride!

JULIA. Oh—then you haven't heard?

ERNEST. My love, I've heard nothing. How could I? There are no daily papers where I come from.

JULIA. Why, Ludwig challenged Rudolph and won, and now he's Grand Duke, and he's revived the law for another century!

ERNEST. What! But you're not serious—you're only joking!

JULIA. My good sir, I'm a light-hearted girl, but I don't chaff bogies.

ERNEST. Well, that's the meanest dodge I ever heard of!

JULIA. Shabby trick, I call it.

ERNEST. But you don't mean to say that you're going to cry off!

JULIA. I really can't afford to wait until your time is up. You know, I've always set my face against long engagements.

ERNEST. Then defy the law and marry me now. We will fly to your native country, and I'll play broken-English in London as you play broken-German here!

JULIA. No. These legal technicalities cannot be defied. Situated as you are, you have no power to make me your wife. At best you could only make me your widow.

ERNEST. Then be my widow—my little dainty, winning, winsome widow!

JULIA. Now what would be the good of that? Why, you goose, I should marry again within a month!

The musical score is written for a full vocal ensemble and piano. The vocal parts are arranged in a vertical stack, each with a staff and a vocal line. The parts are: PRINCESS, PRINCE, COST., HER., T₁, T₂, NOBLES (T₃ and T₄), B₁ and B₂, and a piano accompaniment at the bottom. The vocal lines for PRINCESS, PRINCE, COST., HER., T₁, T₂, T₃, T₄, B₁, and B₂ all feature the vocal line 'Ah!'. The piano accompaniment is written in a grand staff (treble and bass clefs) and includes a piano (pp) dynamic marking. The page number 67 is located at the bottom left of the page.

PRINCE. Well, my dear, here we are at last—just in time to compel Duke Rudolph to fulfil the terms of his marriage contract. Another hour and we should have been too late.

PRINCESS. Yes, papa, and if you hadn't fortunately discovered a means of making an income by honest industry, we should never have got here at all.

PRINCE. Very true. Confined for the last two years within the precincts of my palace by a ~~delusional bootmaker who held~~ a warrant for my arrest, I devoted my enforced leisure to a study of the doctrine of chances—~~mainly with the view of ascertaining whether there was the remotest chance of my ever going out for a walk again~~—and this led to the discovery of a singularly fascinating little round game which I have called Roulette, and by which, in one sitting, I won no less than five thousand francs! My first act was to pay my bootmaker—my second, to engage a good useful working set of second-hand nobles—and my third, to hurry you off to Pfennig Halbpennig ~~as fast as a train of luxury could carry me~~!

PRINCESS. Yes, and a pretty job-lot of second-hand nobles you've scraped together!

PRINCE (doubtfully). Pretty, you think? Humph! I don't know. I should say tol-lol, my love—only tol-lol. ~~They are not at all satisfactory~~. There is a certain air of unreality about them—they are not convincing.

COSTUMIER. But, my goot friend, what can you expect for eighteen-pence a day!

PRINCE. Now take this Peer, for instance. What the deuce do you call him?

COSTUMIER. Him? Oh, he's a swell—he's the Duke of Riviera.

PRINCE. Oh, he's a Duke, is he? Well, that's no reason why he should look so confoundedly haughty. (To NOBLE.) Be affable, sir! (NOBLE takes attitude of affability.) That's better. (Passing to another.) Now, who's this with his moustache coming off?

COSTUMIER. Vhy, you're Viscount Mentone, ain't you?

NOBLE. Blest if I know. (Turning up his sword-belt.) It's wrote here—yes, Viscount Mentone.

COSTUMIER. Then vhy don't you say so? 'Old yerself up—you ain't carryin' sandwich boards now. (Adjusts his moustache.)

PRINCE. Now, ~~once for all~~, you Peers—when His Highness arrives, don't stand like sticks, but appear to take an intelligent and sympathetic interest in what is going on. ~~You needn't say anything, but let your gestures be in accordance with the spirit of the conversation.~~ ~~Now~~ take the word from me. Affability! (attitude). Submission! (attitude). Surprise! (attitude). Shame! (attitude). Grief! (attitude). Joy! (attitude). That's better! You can do it ~~if you like~~!

PRINCESS. But, papa, where in the world is the Court? There is positively no one here to receive us! * I can't help feeling that Rudolph wants to get out of it because I'm poor. He's a miserly little wretch—that's what he is.

PRINCE. Well, I shouldn't go so far as to say that. I should rather describe him as an enthusiastic collector of coins—of the realm—~~and he must not be too hard upon a numismatist if he feels a certain disinclination to part with some of his really very valuable specimens.~~ It's a pretty hobby: I've often thought I should like to collect some coins myself.

PRINCESS. Papa, I'm sure there's some one behind that curtain. I saw it move!

PRINCE. Then no doubt they are coming. Now mind, you Peers—haughty affability combined with a sense of what is due to your exalted ranks, ~~or I'll fine you half a franc each~~
~~for every word I say.~~

* The first-night libretto has a longer version of this passage that sheds additional light on the characters:

PRINCESS. But, papa, where in the world is the Court? There is positively no one here to receive us!

PRINCE. Well, my love, you must remember that we have taken Duke Rudolph somewhat by surprise. These small German potentates are famous for their scrupulous adherence to ceremonial observances, and it may be that the etiquette of this Court demands that we should be received with a certain elaboration of processional pomp—which Rudolph may, at this moment, be preparing.

PRINCESS. I can't help feeling that he wants to get out of it. First of all you implored him to come to Monte Carlo and marry me there, and he refused on account of the expense. Then you implored him to advance us the money to enable us to go to him—and again he refused, on account of the expense. He's a miserly little wretch—that's what he is.

PRINCE. Well, I shouldn't go so far...

The first system of the musical score is for a piano. It begins with a treble clef and a 2/4 time signature. The key signature has one flat (B-flat). The music starts with a forte fortissimo (ff) dynamic. The right hand plays a series of eighth-note chords, while the left hand plays a single eighth note. The system ends with a key signature change to two sharps (F# and C#).

f

The second system of the musical score continues the piece. It begins with a forte (f) dynamic. The right hand plays a series of eighth-note chords, while the left hand plays a single eighth note. The system ends with a key signature change to two sharps (F# and C#).

15

The third system of the musical score continues the piece. It begins with a key signature change to two sharps (F# and C#). The right hand plays a series of eighth-note chords, while the left hand plays a single eighth note. The system ends with a key signature change to two sharps (F# and C#).

LUDWIG. There, what do you think of that? That's our official ceremonial for the reception of visitors of the very highest distinction.

PRINCE (puzzled). It's very quaint—very curious indeed. Prettily footed, too. Prettily footed.

LUDWIG. Would you like to see how we say “good-bye” to visitors of distinction? That ceremony is also performed with the foot.

PRINCE. Really, this tone—ah, but perhaps you have not completely grasped the situation?

LUDWIG. Not altogether.

PRINCE. Ah, ~~the Prince of Monte Carlo~~ (Significantly.) I am the father of the Princess of Monte Carlo. Doesn't that convey any idea to the Grand Ducal mind?

LUDWIG. (stolidly). Nothing definite.

PRINCE (aside). H'm—very odd! Never mind—try again! (Aloud.) This is the daughter of the Prince of Monte Carlo. Do you take?

LUDWIG (still puzzled). No—not yet. Go on—don't give it up—I daresay it will come presently.

PRINCE. Very odd—never mind—try again. (With sly significance.) Twenty years ago! Little doddle doddle! Two little doddle doddles! Happy father—hers and yours. Proud mother—yours and hers! Hah! Now you take? I see you do! I see you do!

LUDWIG. Nothing is more annoying than to feel that you're not equal to the intellectual pressure of the conversation. I wish he'd say something intelligible.

PRINCE. You didn't expect me?

LUDWIG (jumping at it). No, no. I grasp that—thank you very much. (Shaking hands with him.) No, I did not expect you!

PRINCE. I thought not. But ha! ha! at last I have escaped from my enforced restraint. (General movement of alarm.) (To crowd, who are stealing off.) No, no—you misunderstand me. I mean I've paid my debts! ~~And how do you think I did it?~~ Through the medium of Roulette!

ALL. Roulette?

~~Yes, yes. Now you're getting obscure again. The lucid interval has expired.~~

PRINCE. I'll explain. It's an invention of my own—the simplest thing in the world ~~and~~ ~~but is most remarkable; it is a simple thing to play and a most difficult thing to lose!~~ I'll tell you all about it.

LUDWIG. Capital game.—Haven't a penny left!

LUDWIG. Thanks, no. I should only be robbing you.

PRINCESS (affectionately). Do, dearest—it's such fun!

Dialogue Continuation if Roulette Song Omitted

BARONESS. Why, you forward little hussy, how dare you?

(Takes her away from LUDWIG.)

LUDWIG. You mustn't do that, my dear—never in the presence of the Grand Duchess, I beg!

PRINCESS (weeping). Oh, papa, he's got a Grand Duchess!

LUDWIG. A Grand Duchess! My good girl, I've got three Grand Duchesses!

PRINCESS. Well, I'm sure! Papa, let's go away—this is not a respectable Court.

PRINCE. All these Grand Dukes have their little fancies, my love. This Potentate appears to be collecting wives. It's a pretty hobby—I should like to collect a few myself. This (admiring BARONESS) is a charming specimen—an antique, I should say—of the early Merovingian period, if I'm not mistaken; and here's another—a Scotch lady, I think (alluding to JULIA), and (alluding to LISA) a little one thrown in. Two half-quarters and a makeweight! (To LUDWIG.) Have you such a thing as a catalogue of the Museum?

PRINCESS. But I cannot permit Rudolph to keep a museum—

LUDWIG. Rudolph? Go along with you, I'm not Rudolph! Rudolph died yesterday!

PRINCE and PRINCESS. What!

LUDWIG. Quite suddenly—of—of—a cardiac affection.

PRINCE and PRINCESS. Of a cardiac affection?

LUDWIG. Yes, a pack-of-cardiac affection. He fought a Statutory Duel with me and lost, and I took over all his engagements—including this imperfectly preserved old lady, to whom he has been engaged for the last three weeks.

PRINCESS. Three weeks! But I've been engaged to him for the last twenty years!

BARONESS, LISA, and JULIA. Twenty years!

PRINCE (aside). It's all right, my love—they can't get over that. (Aloud.) He's yours—take him, and hold him as tight as you can!

PRINCESS. My own! (Embracing LUDWIG.)

LUDWIG. Here's another!—the fourth in four-and-twenty hours! Would anybody else like to marry me? You, ma'am—or you—anybody! I'm getting used to it!

BARONESS. But let me tell you, ma'am—

JULIA. Why, you impudent little hussy—

LISA. Oh, here's another—here's another! (Weeping.)

PRINCESS. Poor ladies, I'm very sorry for you all; but, you see, I've a prior claim. Come, away we go—there's not a moment to be lost!

LUDWIG. Not a bit of it! I've revived the Law for another century!*

RUDOLPH. You didn't revive it! You couldn't revive it! You—you are an impostor, sir—a tuppenny rogue, sir! You—you never were, and in all human probability never will be—Grand Duke of Pfennig Anything!

ALL. What!!!

RUDOLPH. Never—never, never! (Aside.) Oh, my internal economy!

LUDWIG. That's absurd, you know. I fought the Grand Duke. He drew a King, and I drew an Ace. He perished in inconceivable agonies on the spot. Now, as that's settled, we'll go on with the wedding.

RUDOLPH. It—it isn't settled. You—you can't. I—I—(To NOTARY.) Oh, tell him—tell him! I can't!

NOTARY. Well, the fact is, there's been a little mistake here. On reference to the Act that regulates Statutory Duels, I find it is expressly laid down that the Ace shall count invariably as lowest!

ALL. As lowest!

RUDOLPH (breathlessly). As—lowest—lowest—lowest! So you're the ghoest—ghoest—ghoest! (Aside.) Oh, what is the matter with me inside here!

ERNEST. Well, Julia, as it seems that the law hasn't been revived—and as, consequently, I shall come to life in about three minutes—(consulting his watch)—

* Productions that include Rudolph's song, No. 28a, might consider restoring the first-night version of Ludwig's line: "My good sir, it's no use your saying that I can't revive the Law, in face of the fact that I have revived it."

JULIA. My objection falls to the ground. (Resignedly.) Very well![§]

PRINCESS. And am I to understand that I was on the point of marrying a dead man without knowing it? (To RUDOLPH, who revives.) Oh, my love, what a narrow escape I've had!

RUDOLPH. Oh—you are the Princess of Monte Carlo, and you've turned up just in time! Well, you're an attractive little girl, you know, but you're as poor as a rat!* (They retire up together.) [INSERT 3 LINES BELOW]

LISA. That's all very well, but what is to become of me? (To LUDWIG.) If you're a dead man— (Clock strikes three.)

LUDWIG. But I'm not. Time's up—the Act has expired—I've come to life—the parson is still in attendance, and we'll all be married directly.

ALL. Hurrah!

~~§ Ghost seems to have nodded off here. As Ernest drew a King, he actually won the first voluntary duel, never "died," and therefore cannot "come to life." Julia's change of heart is a bit surprising, but time from the first night must at least make it a bit funnier.~~

Insert

~~JULIA. My objection falls to the ground. (Resignedly.) Very well! But will you promise to give me some strong scenes of justifiable jealousy?~~

~~ERNEST. Justifiable jealousy? My love, I couldn't do it!~~

~~JULIA. Then I won't play.~~

~~ERNEST. Well, well, I'll do my best. (They retire up together.)~~

* Productions that include the Roulette Song, No. 27, might consider restoring these lines from the first-night libretto:

PRINCE. Pardon me—there you mistake. Accept her dowry—with a father's blessing! (Gives him a small Roulette board, then flirts with BARONESS.)

RUDOLPH. Why, what do you call this?

PRINCESS. It's my little Wheel of Fortune. I'll tell you all about it. (They retire up, conversing.)
